

amount required will be left up to the discretion of each State.

These reasonable measures are already required by most State commissions, but establishing them as national standards will protect those boxers competing in less carefully regulated jurisdictions.

The U.S. attorneys in each State will enforce S. 187. The bill will empower U.S. attorneys to seek a temporary or permanent injunction against individuals violating this act. This will bolster State commissioners to resist the intimidation that results in dangerous and fraudulent professional boxing events.

Let me clearly emphasize what this legislation does not do. Unlike other boxing reform proposals that have been introduced in the Congress over the last decade, S. 187 requires no new Federal or State tax dollars; establishes no Federal boxing bureaucracy; and imposes no burdensome regulations upon State officials.

I am very pleased that S. 187 has received virtually unanimous support from every sector of the boxing industry. It has been enthusiastically endorsed by the Association of Boxing Commissions [ABC], which represents 35 State boxing commissions across the United States. Over 20 chief State boxing officers have written to me in support of this bill, ranging from prominent boxing States such as Nevada, Florida, and New Jersey, to smaller commissions such as Kentucky, Ohio, and my home State of Arizona.

Most important to me, however, is the enthusiastic support I have received from professional boxers themselves. They bear all the risk of this violent profession, and they are the people I want to protect with this legislation. Legendary champions Muhammad Ali, George Foreman, and Sugar Ray Leonard each wrote to me in support of S. 187, and I am deeply grateful to them.

I also want to note the special participation of two extremely impressive boxing industry professionals in this effort. Mr. Eddie Futch, perhaps the greatest trainer of this era, and accomplished junior featherweight Jerome Coffee both took the time to testify on boxing safety before the Commerce Committee. They graced the committee with their experienced views, and I again extend my sincere gratitude to the both of them for their contributions.●

SNOWBASIN LAND EXCHANGE ACT

● Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, yesterday Senators HATCH, BENNETT, CRAIG, and I introduced S. 1371, the Snowbasin Land Exchange Act. This bill would facilitate a land transfer in Utah.

The consolidation of ownership of lands in the West has been a goal of many Members of the Senate, including me. I have supported many land exchanges for Montana, and I am pleased to be a cosponsor of S. 1371. This bill deals with lands in Utah and would allow the Snowbasin ski area, which will be one of the sites for ski events of the 2002 Winter Olympic Games. The bill would transfer about 1,320 acres from the Forest Service to the ski area and Forest Service would receive lands of equal value which they desire.

About 10 years ago, discussions began between the owners of this land and the Forest Service. Since 1985, there have been studies, hearings, and assessments on the exchange. These include an environmental impact statement, environmental assessment, cultural and historical assessment, fish and wildlife studies, soil and water reviews, and geological studies. Despite a decision made by the Forest Service to exchange 700 acres of land at Snowbasin in 1990, the exchange remains uncompleted today.

Congress needs to act quickly on S. 1371 so the exchange can be completed in the near future. For the 2002 Olympic Games, planning has already begun. This exchange is important so the work at Snowbasin can be completed for Olympic ski events scheduled there.

The 2002 Olympic Games are important to the people of Montana for many reasons. For one, the Olympics will draw people to the Inter-Mountain West, including Montana. This means more travel and tourism dollars to Montana and greater exposure of the attributes Montana possesses.

Mr. President, the Public Lands Subcommittee will hold a hearing on S. 1371 next week, and I look forward to this bill moving forward quickly.●

ENERGY AND WATER APPROPRIATIONS ACT

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, yesterday evening, the Senate passed the conference report on H.R. 1905, the Fiscal Year 1996 Energy and Water Development Appropriations Act. I would like to comment on one aspect of this bill that has tremendous meaning to people in my State of Washington.

During the debate, the senior Senator from Washington made a statement regarding a recent agreement between the various Members of the Senate from the Pacific Northwest and the Clinton administration regarding the recovery of salmon runs in the Columbia and Snake Rivers. He correctly pointed out the two things it represents: First, an acknowledgment by the administration of the need to stabilize recovery costs; and, second, an interim solution that provides some breathing space for the region to develop ideas for longer-term solutions.

My colleague also went the extra step of pointing out all the problems with the status quo, problems on which there is almost no disagreement. He spoke of the escalating costs of recovery measures. He spoke of the increasing financial pressures on Bonneville Power Administration. He spoke of conflicting Federal laws. He spoke of the inability of the Federal Government to develop solutions that work for a very unique region of the country. These are things on which we can both agree. These are problems on which I want to work with him to solve.

He also spoke of his goals in this debate. And again, his goals are substantially similar to mine. He spoke of the need to rebuild the once vibrant salmon runs which so much define the people of the Northwest and their culture. He wants to accomplish that soon, and so do I. He wants the Pacific Northwest—and the United States—to continue to benefit from the magnificent Federal Columbia River Power System, and I think he's right on target.

During his remarks, however, he drew an interesting parallel between this issue and the spotted owl controversy that has vexed our region for so many years. He said, in effect, that while owls are important, they should not be more important than people. I do not think any right-thinking person ever argued that owls should be more important than people; I know I have not. But most people know the real issue has been the gradual degradation of the public forests for which the owl became a symbol. The public has soundly rejected overcutting and overexploitation of the national forests, in favor of ecosystem management approach currently embodied by the Northwest forest plans.

The senior Senator suggests that—like his approach to the spotted owl—we should restore fish, but not at the expense of anyone else. I think that he fundamentally misjudges the differences between the salmon issue and the spotted owl issue. This is not as simple as jobs versus owls. Unlike the owl, salmon are firmly identified with people. They are part of people's basic vision of the Northwest, and they are part of the economic foundation on which our great State has been built. Salmon mean jobs. They put a roof over the heads of fishers and their families. They are at the spiritual center of native American cultures. They are at the core of many family relationships; how many parents have taken their child out for his or her very first fishing trip?

And the decline of salmon has sent a horrendous ripple effect through our economy, through our State, our politics, and even our international relations. The decline of salmon has driven fishers from Washington and Oregon up to Alaska. It has driven parents out of homes. It has created tension between politicians from neighboring States. Lawsuits have been filed. Indian peoples have threatened to enforce their treaty rights. Canada has taken a punitive line against our fishing boats, and our treaty with them has fallen into serious dispute. Why? Because the Federal Government has not taken care of our salmon runs. It is as simple as that, and it's a problem we can fix.

My colleague from Washington correctly points out that the administrative agreement reached last week to
