

be held in the West Bank will be freer and more democratically legitimated than any other elections in the nations surrounding Israel. It is highly unlikely that Yasser Arafat would have decided that elections were the appropriate path to power in the emerging Palestinian entity had that not been a condition laid down by the Israeli government in the ongoing negotiations.

As with our own country, Israeli democracy has not been perfect. There have been lapses, although these have been few compared with the territories. And much of what we know about these occasional lapses comes from the vigorous denunciation of them from people and organizations within Israel, because its democracy is among other things appropriately self-critical.

Israel is not the only new nation that is working hard to demonstrate that democracy is the best way to cope with the multiple dangers in the post-war world. Through the efforts of Nelson Mandela and others, South Africa is also on the list of societies that seek to make this point. But for nearly 50 years, Israel has been the most persistent and successful in demonstrating that democracy is not a luxury to be enjoyed only by societies that are wealthy, secure and well insulated from outside attack, but is a recognition of the fundamental right of men and women to govern themselves freely. When properly understood, it strengthens society and better enables it to cope with the gravest problems.

RECOGNIZING PHYLLIS L.
PETERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 3, 1996

Mr. BAKER of California. Mr. Speaker, education is a crucial building block of our society. An informed electorate is critical to effective self-government. An educated work force is vital to a successful economy. And the capacity for knowledgeable decisionmaking enriches our individual lives.

Dr. Phyllis L. Peterson has played an important role in turning these principles into realities for thousands of men and women in the East Bay of San Francisco. For 12 years she has served ably as president of Diablo Valley College in Pleasant Hill, CA, located in the heart of the Golden State's 10th Congressional District, which I represent here in Washington. Overseeing Diablo's growth as a premier community college, she has been nationally recognized for her leadership in preparing young adults both for careers in the job market and for further academic pursuits.

When Dr. Peterson retires later this year, she will leave a legacy of hope and opportunity for the many lives she has touched in her 37 years as an educator. Her development of the Center for Higher Education in San Ramon made education available in an area previously without a higher educational presence. Her leadership enabled Diablo Valley College to grow to its present enrollment of 23,000 students, providing them with a quality, affordable, and accessible education.

In 1993, her peers called on her to serve as head of the Chief Executive Officers of the California Community Colleges. The University of Texas Community College leadership program recognized her as an outstanding community college president and the Association of California Community College Administrators honored her with the Harry Buttimer Distinguished Administrator Award.

These signal honors were bestowed in recognition of Dr. Peterson's commitment to higher education, her capability as an administrator, and her love for students. Dr. Phyllis L. Peterson is an exemplary educator and community leader, and richly deserves our thanks for all she has done to prepare new leaders for our country and our world. I am pleased to call on my colleagues to join me in honoring her today.

CORNHUSKERS WIN ANOTHER NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP: A CREDIT TO TEAMWORK AND DEDICATED COACHING

HON. BILL BARRETT

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 3, 1996

Mr. BARRETT of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, last night the 1995 college football season climaxed with an awesome display of athletic ability, teamwork, determination, and brilliant coaching. I refer, of course, to the Fiesta Bowl, in Tempe, AZ, and the Nebraska Cornhuskers' impressive and decisive victory over the Florida Gators.

The No. 1 Huskers rolled over the No. 2 Gators 62 to 24 to win their second consecutive NCAA football championship. The Fiesta Bowl win capped off a second straight undefeated season, and put the Big Red in the record books as the first team in 40 years to win back-to-back, undefeated, undisputed national championships.

While some of the Cornhusker players are receiving the laurels of victory because of their outstanding individual performances in last night's game, the real credit rests with the hard work, dedication, and discipline of the entire Cornhusker squad. The old adage that there is no "I" in "TEAM" was never more apparent.

Those who watched the game last night saw a team that loves to play the game and plays it better than any other team in the country. The team was both the Husker offense and defense, and the team ran over, around, and through the vaunted Florida Gators.

Cornhusker Coach Dr. Tom Osborne heads a football program in which we in Nebraska take great pride. It is renowned for its success on the field, but also for its program of weight training and physical conditioning. Dr. Tom is a true sportsman and insists his players be the same. He is also an educator, and it shows in his program—Nebraska has had more academic all-Americans than any other program and graduates more than 85 percent of its players.

It takes not only exceptional talent, but also patience, a thick skin, great courage, and character to coach a team of Nebraska's caliber and national exposure. I applaud Coach Osborne's victory in the Fiesta Bowl last night, and I applaud his unwavering determination to support his players and do what he believes best to turn out young men who understand the responsibility of being not only champions on the football field, but also good citizens. It is not always easy; it is not always without its setbacks, but the success and quality of the players he sends into the world each year speaks volumes about the coaching of Dr. Tom and his staff.

I'm confident that in the annals of college football, the University of Nebraska Cornhusker teams of 1994 and 1995 will be heralded as among the best ever to step onto the college gridiron. I'm even more confident that the discipline and hard work needed to achieve that victory will inspire thousands of Nebraskans and Americans in years to come to achieve the best in their families, communities, businesses, and government.

Congratulations, Huskers.

VALUES

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 3, 1996

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report of Wednesday, December 27, 1995, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

VALUES

"Peace on earth, good will toward men"—it is a blessing echoed often at this time of year. While we have many reasons to be grateful that we live in the U.S., it is also true that Americans daily face many disturbing realities—crime, drug abuse, illegitimacy—which strike right at the heart of a decent life. A few years ago "It's the economy, stupid" conveyed the idea that the economy was paramount on voters' minds; now people are more inclined to blame the nation's problems on the moral decline. Today social issues like crime, welfare, education, and racial preference, and cultural issues like abortion, gay rights, school prayer, flag burning, and television violence have become prominent.

Americans are struggling to restore old-fashioned values to a central place in their lives and to revitalize the family. Parents struggle to raise their children in the face of powerful forces that are sending very different messages to their children than they want to send. Again and again I have been asked by distraught parents to watch a particular movie, listen to a particular piece of music, or watch a television show or video game that encourages casual sex or incessant violence. One parent said to me the other day, "What in the world is going on?"

What parents tell me they really want in life is a benign environment for raising their children. They express deep concern about the birth rate for unwed mothers and the divorce rate, both of which have doubled in recent decades. They are distressed that more children are being raised with less supervision and fewer resources, putting them at much greater risk for delinquency. Each day I encounter heroic parents who have kept their family together against all the odds.

Concern for moral values has always been a part of American life—from the battle against slavery to the battle against excessive use of alcohol. Yet the debate over our society's moral fiber has picked up recently as Americans increasingly question why they face a host of social problems and how best to deal with them. People are fearful that families and values are disappearing, and they often feel hopeless and powerless. I think the debate is worthwhile and healthy, and indicates that we are on our way to addressing our social ills. People ask me what they can do about declining values. The answer begins with individual responsibility.
