SETTING PRIORITIES, KEEPING PROMISES

(Mr. DELAY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, between now and adjournment, the House's top-three priorities will focus squarely on correcting the missed opportunities of the recent past. This summer's blackout revealed the urgency of one of them. America needs a national policy to meet the energy demands of a 21st-century information economy, and it is our job to make that policy. House and Senate negotiators are hard at work developing a final bill; and when it is done, we will have our first comprehensive energy policy in a decade, more than 2 years since the House first passed it.

We are also working with the Senate to complete a Medicare bill that includes prescription drugs to finally strengthen and improve health care for American seniors.

This has been a top domestic priority for several years. We have already passed prescription drug legislation three times over Democrat partisanship, and we are committed to finishing the job this time. And finally, this fall we will complete the remainder of the Federal spending bills for the coming year.

We said all along that saving time during the budget process would save us money during the spending process, and now we have a chance to live up to that promise. Recent Congressional Budget Office projections of future deficits should serve as a warning to all of us about the need for spending restraint. These deficits are spending-driven deficits, and the only way to get the budget back to balance is through spending restraint and economic growth. Thanks in part to the tax relief the Republican Congress has passed in recent years, the American people are starting to revive the national economy, and the best thing we can do to help them is to maintain the fiscal discipline laid out in the budget proposed by the President and passed by the House. The last thing we want is to explode the deficit with new spending like the almost-$1 trillion worth proposed by the minority so far this year.

Mr. Speaker, the Republican majority is committed to maintaining spending discipline and keeping the Federal budget on a glide-path to balance just as we are committed to completing the American people's unfinished business.
